Governor McMaster
State of South Carolina
1100 Gervais St
Columbia, SC 29201

Dear Governor McMaster,

Thank you for your leadership in addressing the urgent and multifaceted threat China poses to South Carolina and our country, not only militarily, but also politically, and economically. Your commitment and leadership in helping bring a $1.3 billion lithium processing facility, a crucial part of our supply chain, to the United States is critical in protecting our country from foreign threats. We also commend the leadership of South Carolina that has moved towards banning land purchases by foreign entities that pose a threat to the United States.

As a non-profit policy organization dedicated to common sense solutions to challenges facing everyday Americans, A Common Sense America is extremely concerned about foreign influence over extremist environmental groups, including the Center for Biological Diversity and Sierra Club, that seek to shape policy that directly impacts national security, food security, energy independence and technological advancement domestically.

We urge you to launch an investigation and review the Center for Biological Diversity, Sierra Club and other extremist front groups for potentially utilizing foreign investment and resources to influence policy in the state of South Carolina with the goal of undermining America's food production, and economic and national security interests.

Recently, the Office of National Intelligence (ONI)<sup>1</sup> has released the 2023 threat assessment for America. This report reveals the growing threat America faces from foreign interests, such as China and Russia, abroad and domestically. Specifically, the report states foreign interests are engaged in the following activities:

- Purchasing large areas of American land and transportation hubs, and spying on military bases
- "Using a variety of tools, from public investment to espionage to try to advance technological capabilities, protect their domestic firms from foreign competition, and facilitate these firms' global expansion"
- Attempting to "build influence at the state and local level to shift U.S. policy in [their] favor because of the belief that local officials are more pliable than their federal counterparts"

In response to this report, A Common Sense America has also called on Congress to resume their investigation started in 2018 when a House Committee on Natural Resources investigation found that the manipulation of tax-exempt 501 (c) organizations by foreign entities was a key tactic to influence U.S. policy.

Specifically, the Committee found that the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) arranged meetings with US politicians, held press conferences and coordinated publicity events on behalf of foreign activists. The Committee has sought clarification and insight into CBD's compliance with Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA), all foreign entities CBD engages in efforts to effect policy, and documents related to foreign funding.

CBD is active in multiple states, including South Carolina, and is attempting to influence state and local policy makers in order to undermine American policy at the behest of foreign interest. CBD has 195 staff members, almost half of them lawyers, and has spent more than $100 million of undisclosed funds over the last 5 years. Sierra Club, Natural Resources Defense Council and Earthjustice too all follow the same playbook in influencing domestic policy.

One policy area of deep concern, which was detailed in a recent article from Bloomberg titled "Russia and China Have a Stranglehold on the World's Food Security,"<sup>2</sup> is agriculture and raw critical minerals needed to maintain America's food supply. The DOI report found that, with the conflict in Ukraine and other tensions building around the world, the intentions of America's foreign competitors are to control global supply chains and "using those supply chain dependencies to threaten and cut off foreign countries during a crisis."

We believe that this area has become the focus of foreign interests and their front groups such as CBD in South Carolina and across the country. With agriculture being South Carolina's largest economic sector, we believe it is paramount to determine whether these environmental groups are being influenced by foreign groups to undermine South Carolina's agricultural industry.

Just this week, the Associated Press published an article, "Amid Strained US ties, China finds unlikely friend in Utah," outlining Chinese influence in the state of Utah via investment in the Mormon Church, to shape state policy issue areas that have direct impact on national security. This is most certainly the tip of the iceberg of efforts from foreign entities to influence domestic policy. South Carolina is no stranger to violations directly from hostile acts from foreign entities as illustrated by the Chinese spy balloon incident, which concluded with the foreign craft shot down off the coast of your great state.

With these latest developments, it is critical that governors and congressional leadership across the country investigate the extent to which foreign influence is infiltrating policymakers in our country at the state and local level.

Thank you for your attention to this critical and timely national security issue. I look forward to working with you to address this challenge and ensure that our nation's natural resources remain secure and protected.

Sincerely,

Executive Director
Center for Biological Diversity, Inc.

Dear Mr. Suckling:

The Committee on Natural Resources is continuing its oversight of the potential manipulation of tax-exempt 501(c) organizations by foreign entities to influence U.S. environmental and natural resources policy to the detriment of our national interests.<sup>1</sup> To date, the discourse about foreign influence in the United States has largely focused on China and Russia.<sup>2</sup> The Committee, however, is concerned that sub-national foreign governments and non-profit foreign entities also use environmental litigation by U.S.-based 501(c) organizations to stop, restrict, delay, or impose additional costs on U.S. military activities.<sup>3</sup>

Since 2003, the Center for Biological Diversity (CBD) has represented a coalition of Japanese and American environmental groups in litigation attempting to stop the planned relocation of Marine Corps Air Station Futenma (MCAS Futenma), located on the Japanese island of Okinawa.<sup>4</sup> In addition, CBD appears to have engaged in political activities within the United States on behalf of the government of the Japanese Prefecture of Okinawa and other foreign entities to influence plans regarding MCAS Futenma's relocation. The alliance between the United States and Japan is the "cornerstone of stability" and a key component of America's rebalancing towards the Asia-Pacific region.<sup>8</sup> Okinawa's strategic southern location in the Ryukyu islands provides a critical forward-operating platform for U.S. military in the region.<sup>9</sup> The approximately 30,000 military personnel stationed there are integral to fulfilling the United States' treaty obligations to Japan.<sup>10</sup> In total, Okinawa is home to about 25 percent of all facilities used by U.S. Forces Japan and about half of all U.S. military personnel in Japan.<sup>11</sup> MCAS Futenma's urban location presents challenges to expanding military operations at the base and is a flashpoint for local opposition to the U.S. military's presence.<sup>12</sup> To defray the cost of the U.S. military's land ownership, the Japanese government provides billions of dollars' worth of subsidies and economic development to Okinawa.<sup>13</sup> In addition, Japan and the United States created the bilateral Special Action Committee on Okinawa (SACO) to examine ways to reduce the burden of U.S. military presence on the Okinawan people, including base relocation and expanding military deployments outside of Okinawa.<sup>14</sup>

Some local opposition undoubtedly represents the sincere concerns of Okinawans regarding the cost of hosting such a large contingent of U.S. military personnel and dependents. According to Japan's Public Security Intelligence Agency (JPSIA), however, many of the political parties and activist groups most vocally opposed to, and willing to take direct action against, the U.S. military presence in Okinawa are "radical" groups like the Japanese Communist Party (JCP) and Okinawan independence movement.<sup>15</sup> The JCP is also currently a member of the ruling coalition in the Okinawan Prefectural Assembly and supports Okinawan Governor Takeshi Onaga's pledge to "never allow construction of a new military base . . . [and to] block it by employing every possible means."<sup>16</sup> The JPSIA also reported that Chinese universities and thinktanks are forging ties with Okinawan independence activists to encourage "a favorable public opinion of China in Okinawa and to [create] division in Japan."<sup>17</sup> This is consistent with China's opposition to further U.S. involvement in the Asia-Pacific region<sup>18</sup> and its perception-management efforts designed to "reward pro-China viewpoints."<sup>19</sup>

Relocating MCAS Futenma has been a priority for both the central Japanese government and the United States for decades.<sup>20</sup> First proposed in 1996, the plan to relocate the air station to a less densely populated part of Okinawa was devised upon agreement by the United States and Japan that the current location posed various challenges, including those to the health and safety of Japanese citizens in surrounding areas.<sup>21</sup> CBD, however, filed suit in 2003 that the new location would violate the National Historic Preservation Act (NHPA) based on the alleged adverse effects the new location would have on the dugong, a marine mammal.<sup>22</sup> CBD argued that dugongs are “associated with traditional Okinawan creation mythology, sometimes being considered the progenitor of the local people.”<sup>23</sup> Despite the Japanese environmental review concluding there would be no adverse impact to the dugongs in Okinawa, the CBD claimed that by virtue of the dugong’s cultural significance under Japanese law, it is “equivalent” to being listed in the U.S. National Register of Historic Places, and therefore protected under the NHPA.<sup>24</sup> While the Japanese government has begun initial construction on the relocation site amid increased political support for the relocation,<sup>25</sup> CBD’s lawsuit seeks “to enjoin [the U.S. Department of Defense] from taking actions in furtherance” of the relocation project until environmental and anti-base activist plaintiffs are satisfied with the military’s environmental review process.<sup>26</sup>

In 2015, CBD appears to have helped organize the visit of an Okinawan delegation to the United States, which included members of the Okinawan Prefectural Assembly and Okinawan municipal governments.<sup>27</sup> During its visit to San Francisco, the delegation met with representatives of a U.S. Senator and U.S. House Representative.<sup>28</sup> The delegation also traveled to Washington, D.C. to meet with lawmakers, the U.S. Marine Mammal Commission, the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation, and “other groups.”<sup>29</sup> On December 3, 2017, CBD led a delegation of American activists to Okinawa to meet with “Okinawan leaders of the opposition to an American military base expansion.”<sup>30</sup> Moreover, CBD has participated in an extensive publicity campaign condemning the base relocation through open letters to the President of the United States and Japanese Prime Minister,<sup>31</sup> purchasing full page

The Committee is concerned that your organization's political activities in the United States in opposition to the relocation of MCAS Futenma and the continued U.S. military presence in Okinawa may require compliance with the Foreign Agents Registration Act (FARA).<sup>34</sup> "The purpose of FARA is to ensure that the U.S. Government and the people of the United States are informed of the source of information (propaganda) and the identity of persons attempting to influence U.S. public opinion, policy, and laws."<sup>35</sup> In relevant part, FARA requires any person or entity, including non-profits, to register with the Department of Justice (DOJ) if they act "at the . . . request . . . of a foreign principal or of a person any of whose activities are directly or indirectly, supervised, directed, controlled, financed, or subsidized in whole or in major part by a foreign principal . . . ."<sup>36</sup>

Registration under FARA is required for any entity that attempts, on behalf of a foreign principal, to influence any section of the U.S. public or a U.S. government official in "formulating, adopting, or changing the domestic or foreign policies of the United States . . . ."<sup>37</sup> The law is clear about registration requirements for a person or group acting in the political or public interests of a foreign government or entity, even when done through intermediaries.<sup>38</sup> FARA registration encompasses groups or individuals acting as public relations counsels, publicity agents, information service employees, and political consultants working in the interests of a foreign principal.<sup>39</sup> Likewise, groups or persons must also register if they solicit, collect, disburse, or dispense funds for or in the interest of a foreign principal.<sup>40</sup> The failure to register is an ongoing offense and subject to punishment ranging from a fine of not more than $10,000 to imprisonment for not more than five years.<sup>41</sup>

While FARA contains an exception for attorneys representing foreign principals before a judicial or agency proceeding, this exception does not extend to an attorney's advocacy outside of "the course of judicial proceedings."<sup>42</sup> Registration under FARA is also not required when an agent is acting on behalf of a foreign government that the President has deemed "vital to the defense of the United States" so long as the agent only engages in activities that further the joint interests of the foreign principal country and the United States.<sup>43</sup> Based on our investigation, the Committee does not believe either of these exceptions are applicable to the CBD's activities.
